DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The subtle manipulation of limited space enhances the total effect of this small, unobtrusive church (built in 1874) in an imaginative blend of High Victorian Gothic and Romanesque Revival styles.

A central entrance located in the transverse narthex is accented by a stained glass tympanum enclosed by a bichromatic Venetian arch, an imperative feature, thought John Ruskin, of High Victorian architecture. Two Corinthian columns flank the doorway, which has been altered to accommodate a modern glass door. Very typical of the Romanesque Revival style is the tripartite round-arch gable window. A similar, single window fronting each recessed side of the narthex alludes to the Continental influence in this mode.

A stained glass wheel window capped by the repetitive Venetian arch highlights the facade of the nave. Two medieval side windows repeat the round-arch form in miniature arcaded corbel tables.

A buttressed false bell tower saddles the roof gable.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Block 497 was developed on a plot of land originally owned by John Eager Howard. During the 1870's it was subdivided into numerous smaller plots which eventually became the properties of the McKim family, Robert Garrett, Samuel Adams, and Hugh Sisson. The block is almost wholly intact except for those buildings razed for the high rise apartment complex located at the northeast corner of Chase and St. Paul Sts. The earliest structure, a Romanesque Revival/High Victorian Gothic church, built in 1874, exemplifies the American architect's preference for a style less demanding than the pure forms of High Victorian designs which influenced the townhouses on St. Paul St. Large townhouse in the Queen Anne style dominates Calvert St. and date from the late eighties and nineties.

The best traditions in late Nineteenth Century American architecture survive on this block. Few areas retain such fine examples of townhouses delineating the transition from the High Victorian Gothic and Romanesque Revival to the Queen Anne style.
